It means the pinnacle. As in the highest height. Shawn Warfield has been in the game for almost two decades. He's seen it all and done it all. So it only makes sense that Warfield would perch himself high atop the barber scene in Atlanta with a near spotless shop where the clients sit mesmerized by the shine and polish that exudes from every chair in this upscale barbershop hiding humbly in the cut in Lithonia, Georgia. Saturday mornings, you can hardly find a chair in the waiting area and there's a steady flow coming through the rest of the week. You know what they say. Cream rises to the top or in this case—the Apogee.

Shawn(Owner)-

From a family of master barbers, comes a consummate barber. Shawn's dad and uncle passed along the tools and gifts needed for success. He then took what he knew and raised the bar for barbershops. The result, he's at the top of his game and the whole city will know his name.

Reggie- A country boy at heart, Reggie comes from Green County, Georgia a town of 5,000 people who are downhome good folks. The town had one barbershop when Reggie was growing up there. He lives by the creed: Keep God first and let him anoint my hands.

Marky- A native of South Cackalacky, he's been chopping heads for 14 years. This low-country kat, has a simple philosophy that he lives by. It's a tried and true practice that we should all adopt—Respect everybody.

James-For 20 years, James has been cutting heads. He started down 95 South at the bottom, and came up to Atlanta from Miami. His misses the swaying palm trees and blue water. But he embraces the opportunities available in Atlanta and practices R.A.K. –Random Acts of Kindness.

Milton- A native Atlantan, Milton has been cutting hair for 24 years, that's right almost a quarter of a century. He's seen the barber game change, evolve and change all over again. His slogan, "It's what I do. Just cuttin' up."

Mack- When you grow up sweeping hair off the floor at the barbershop of your dad's friend's barbershop, chances are, you've got barbering in your blood. He fell in love with the atmosphere and decided to make it his profession. If he could just get away from the shop to play some golf, he'd be doing just fine.
